

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

LISZT'S MISSA SOLENNIS (DIE GRANER MESSE)

FRANZ Liszt wrote to Richard Wagner from Weimar, on March 12, 1855: "I shall have to work hard for several months to come. The Cardinal Primate of Hungary has set me to the task of composing a grand Mass for the inauguration of the Cathedral of Gran. The ceremony will take place in August at the latest. The Emperor will be present, and I have undertaken to conduct the Mass, etc., for which purpose I have to be in Gran (three hours' distance from Pesth) a month before. The task gives me much pleasure, and I hope to produce an edifying work."

The work was performed in the Cathedral of Gran, in Hungary, on August 31, 1856. Liszt had thrown himself with the utmost devotion into its composition. He wrote again to Wagner on May 2: "During these last weeks I have spun myself into my Mass, and yesterday, at last, I got it done. I do not know how it will sound, but I may say that I have prayed it rather than composed it."

Liszt as a boy had desired to enter the Catholic priesthood, so it is said, but was dissuaded therefrom by his father and his priestly adviser, who perceived the overwhelming claim that music had on his life. Exalted religious and mystical tendencies, thus signified in his boyhood, persisted in Liszt's character through his life. They went through a fiery ordeal in his younger days of dazzling worldly success; but they were not extinguished. His thoughts were turned strongly toward the Church before he resigned his post of conductor at the Court of Weimar, in 1861, and he joined the order of the Franciscans as a Tertiarian, or penitent of the third order, who remain in the world, but follow a rule or discipline as do the others. His life in Rome, after he had left Weimar, brought him into still closer relations with the Church. In 1879 he received the tonsure and an honorary canonry. He wore the priestly garb, though he was never a priest.

This phase of Liszt's career explains in a certain way his attitude toward ecclesiastical music, to which he devoted a large part of his creative activity. He approached it with a deep and fervent piety; and the mystical trend of his character found expression not only in his religious compositions, but also, in a measure, in certain other of his works.

Liszt entered upon this branch of musical art, as he did on the others which he cultivated, with definite intentions of accomplishing a reform, and of following the artistic ideals of the new German school of music, of which he was one of the foremost exponents and champions. It was his object to renew the spirit of liturgical music in the Roman Church. The older ecclesiastical compositions of the style that has come to be known by the name of Palestrina—serene, elevated, celestially aloof from human passion and striving—had given place to a more or less debased musical expression, that had much in common with the shallow operatic style of the mid-century, and that, even in its highest manifestations, had completely forgotten the older spirit. Liszt looked, not backward to this spirit, but forward to another and a newer one that he conceived to be more in consonance with the age. In an essay published as early as 1834—he being then twenty-three years old—he conjured up the vision of a new kind of Church music that should "unite in colossal relations the theatre and the Church; should be at once dramatic and religious, splendid and simple, solemn and serious, fiery and unrestrained, stormy and tranquil, clear and heartfelt." He aspired to an ecclesiastical musical style that should bring the liturgy of the Church nearer to an intellectual and emotional expression of the age, should be in closer sympathy with existing artistic ideals as they were actually manifested in music.

This aspiration it is not difficult to find embodied in Liszt's church music. How far he went in it can be seen most clearly from the extreme example of his Hungarian Coronation Mass (composed for the coronation of Francis Joseph as King of Hungary in 1867), in which he uses Hungarian melodic and harmonic traits and cadences. Yet it should also be said that in his later years he turned more toward the older and stricter manner.

The Gran Mass is an endeavor to heighten by musical setting the emotional and ethical significance of every word and every phrase of the Mass, in the same way as in Wagner's music-dramas the music heightens the meaning of text and dramatic action in them. Consequently we find in the Gran Mass an unceasing effort at emotional expressiveness, dramatic effect, delineation of changing moods, pictorial color, the suggestion of mystery, awe and personal devotion, jubilation, grief, as the words of the holy office by turns summon them up. In fine, it is a purely subjective interpretation of the effect the Mass may be supposed to exert, line for line, upon a devoutly earnest and strongly impressible religious nature, following the sacrament as it is administered. This is a complete negation of the ancient ideal of an ecclesiastical style—elevated, vague, abstract, dissolving individual experience into a general mood of supplication and uplift rather than giving voice to any individual's prayer.

In this Mass Liszt attempted to attain unity and homogeneity of musical expression as it had not been attained in the musical setting of the Mass before, by the device of community and transformation of theme—the use of transformed and transfigured versions of one or more melodic phrases in different connections and contexts. Schumann had already made use of this in several of his instrumental compositions, and Liszt had greatly developed it in his larger instrumental works—the symphonies, the symphonic poems and the piano concertos. It is the process that reached its highest development in the use of leading-motives in Wagner's later music-dramas.

The listener will find in the "Gloria" a phrase that has the effect of a summons, which recurs in the "Resurrexit" and in the "Hosanna," in the "Dona Nobis" and again at the end. The chief melodic motive of the "Christe Eleison" makes its reappearance as an important part of the substance of later sections, as the "Qui Tollis," the "Benedictus," the "Agnus Dei." There are other such borrowings.

There has been great debate as to whether or not this is the "edifying work" that Liszt hoped to produce. Upon its first appearance, and after its performances in Gran and those which speedily followed in other places, there was a storm of critical articles and pamphlets that raged about its merits and defects and its general tendencies—a part of a greater disturbance in which the artistic world was involved over the "New German" school of music that was then beginning to make its way under the leadership of Wagner and Liszt. The specifically musical value of Liszt's inspiration was disputed and defended; the churchliness of his conception questioned and upheld. This literary disturbance is now well-nigh forgotten. One point was the subject of a particularly obstinate discussion: Is the work in the spirit of Beethoven, or not? Hermann Kretzschmar, in his interesting analysis, has pointed out how clearly it is the fruit of the influence of Beethoven's last period—referring, of course, especially to the great Missa Solennis in D major. This, too, is a work that overturned all previous ideals of a churchly style. Its goal is, says Kretzschmar, the identification of artistic forms and resources with direct natural impressions. The finished work, developed after a well-laid plan, is, in its freedom and fullness of life, to have the effect of an inspired improvisation. Beethoven never wrought more laboriously than he did upon the Missa Solennis; never tested and filed his results more critically. "Liszt's Gran Mass, on the other hand, is almost literally an improvisation. In the 'Gloria' and 'Credo' we find passages which are written with an astonishingly great economy of intellectual expenditure: places in which an insignificant orchestral motive is repeated and transposed without end and without object. It is an à fresco style that attains its object on a single hearing, but does not well sustain detailed study." Hanslick accuses Liszt of having set out with the intention of searching the text of the Mass for the purpose of introducing new intellectual conceptions into it—ideas which the knowledge and training of his predecessors never suggested to them, and which would not occur to a merely musical talent, however rich. "To him the 'word' is in the highest degree important. With the laborious zeal of a theologian, Liszt translates the hidden meaning of each single word into a corresponding musical 'intention'"; and he finds the Mass half opera, half theological treatise.

On the other hand, consider the judgment of Lina Ramann, Liszt's biographer: "We feel ourselves in the Church. . . . No musical declamation contrary to the sense of the text disturbs the course of our reflections, no soulless formalism cools the warmth of our religious exaltation, but the truth and depth, the mystical quality of the expression seizes a mighty hold upon the soul. . . . Liszt's genius found the right form to express the many-sidedness of the text of the Ordinary of the Mass, notwithstanding the diversity of its character and of the content of its single parts, musically as an organic whole and as a homogeneous work of art. It is the first Mass in which this end is attained." Again, listen to a later biographer, M. D. Calvocoressi: "Besides being an admirable monument of a faith all too rare in the nineteenth century, it stupefies us by its sheer musical beauty, by its structure, by the unity of thought which animates it and by its logical cohesion, absolute and perfectly natural in all its parts. It stupefies still more him who has felt the grandiose power that animates it from beginning to end."

Of one thing the listener may be sure in the midst of conflicting opinions that still prevail with regard to Liszt's music: that this Mass is an absolutely faithful reflex of the artistic personality of its composer; that it is in the highest degree an embodiment of his musical ideals and aspirations, as well as of a religious faith that is peculiarly characteristic of his nature. The image shows a page from a musical score. At the top, there are four staves for vocal parts: Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. These are grouped under the heading 'Soli'. Below these are four more staves for the same vocal parts, grouped under the heading 'Chorus'. The tempo is marked 'Andante solenne'. At the bottom, there is a piano part with a grand staff (treble and bass clefs). The key signature is one sharp (F#). The vocal parts are mostly whole notes, while the piano part has more complex rhythmic patterns.

The piano accompaniment consists of a right hand with a continuous sixteenth-note arpeggiated figure and a left hand with a similar but slower-moving arpeggiated pattern. The key signature has three sharps (F#, C#, G#) and the time signature is 4/4.

Je-su Chri-ste!

Je-su Chri-ste!

Je-su Chri-ste!

Je-su Chri-ste!

The piano accompaniment continues with the same arpeggiated texture as the first system. The vocal staves show a melodic line with a long note on 'Je-' and a shorter note on '-su Chri-ste!'. The key signature remains three sharps and the time signature is 4/4.

\* If a cut is desirable, this entire fugal passage may be omitted, continuing from the choral unison entrance "cum Sancto Spiritu" at the sign  $\Phi$  on page 45

The image displays a musical score for a piece titled "Amen". The score is written for a vocal ensemble and piano accompaniment. The key signature is three sharps (F#, C#, G#), and the time signature is 4/4. The vocal parts are arranged in four staves, each with a vocal line and a corresponding "Amen" lyric. The piano accompaniment is shown in the bottom two staves. The score is divided into two systems. The first system shows the vocal parts entering with the word "Amen" and the piano accompaniment providing a harmonic foundation. The second system continues the vocal parts and piano accompaniment, with the piano part featuring a more complex, flowing melody in the right hand and a steady bass line in the left hand.

The image displays a musical score for the song "The Rose Tree." It includes vocal parts for a male soloist and a male chorus, along with piano accompaniment. The score is written in G major (one sharp) and 4/4 time. The vocal parts feature a melody with a long note on the word "men." The piano accompaniment consists of a rhythmic pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes. The score is arranged in two systems, with the vocal parts and piano accompaniment clearly distinguished by their staves and clefs.
